

The following is a list of IEA's artist member instructors. IEA does not make a separate investigation of the suitability of the instructors or their classes. Please take a moment to research each prospective instructor and the classes or workshops offered. It is your responsibility to select an instructor that best meets your educational needs based on experience, qualifications, and attention to safety.

You can visit instructor websites to review bios, examples of work and teaching experience. Talk to previous students who have taken their workshops and ask for recommendations.

Many instructors are self-taught and others hold a BFA or MFA. A BFA or MFA indicates academic study in art but does not specify a medium such as encaustic.

Your selection process must consider experience as well as recommendations from previous students or colleagues. As safety standards are critically important, request their curriculum to insure that all safety standards are included.

Take time to research your instructors and you will reap the rewards of studying under the tutelage of a kindred spirit!

Bringing contemporary vision to an ancient medium
